

5. Entrepreneurship and Management

This pack of lectures is geared towards professionals and entrepreneurs who are looking to learn new tools and approaches in order to run their businesses more efficiently and to create effective brands. Because of the difficulties raising money in the current economic context, it also includes classes focusing on traditional and alternative sources of funding, as well as an introduction to financial management. It also provides an overview of the healthcare industry value chains and business models, covering the main stakeholders in the life sciences sector. It provides powerful insight and key figures on the main stakeholders in life sciences, biotechnology, pharmaceuticals and healthcare services, as well as the main trends and challenges they face. Additionally, this set of classes introduces the topic of business-model innovation applied to the healthcare industry. How is value created and delivered in healthcare? What are its main financial models? How can we recognize innovative business models in healthcare? This pack of classes provides answers to these questions.
